Construction Litigation

Mr. Dogali's law practice has always emphasized construction law, encompassing all types of construction disputes involving performing arts centers, power plants, industrial facilities, retail and movie complexes, bridges, college and educational facilities, hospitals, nursing home and retirement facilities, residences, airports, commercial office structures, condominiums, roads and highways. Mr. Dogali has represented all aspects of the construction industry: architects and engineers, developers, owners, contractors, subcontractors, surveyors, and insurers, in construction cost overrun and delay claims, construction defect claims, lien claims, performance and payment bond disputes, claims of professional malpractice in design and construction administration, and personal injury matters.

Mr. Dogali has also lectured on a wide variety of issues for design professionals, including risks arising from construction phase services, code compliance issues, ADA concerns, delay damages, the economic loss doctrine, and more. Previously, Mr. Dogali served as national moderator of the Construction Law Forum on Counsel Connect, formerly the nation's largest internet online service for attorneys, and as construction law panelist for Court TV Legal Helpline, a public service webpage.
